About Us

Many beginning writers overlook magazine writing. Often these new writers (and even some of the older ones) are only trying to publish books. Some people dream of holding their own novel while others are creating some how-to or nonfiction type of book. Each dream is valid and their work is to be applauded. They are, therefore, our best guides and philosophers, when we are in some confusion. Books give us inspiration to do great things. They fill our minds with noble thoughts. They improve our minds and awaken our souls. But bad books poison our minds. We should therefore select and read good books only. Books are a great blessing. They are useful to us in many ways. They are our best friends. When we are in trouble, books stand by us and give us the right advice. Books console us in our sorrows. We never feel alone in the company of books. Books are written by experienced persons who are wise and who have matured minds. Several years ago at a conference, I met an unpublished author who had faithfully worked on her 100,000 word novel. With three small children, this mother labored to finish her novel. I applauded and encouraged her effort--yet this author was doing little else to build her reputation as a writer. I understand how people value books. I appreciate the worth and cost of writing a printed book for a traditional publisher and I've completed this task over 50 different times for many books. With one article, I have reached millions of people through publication. The...
