About Us

HOW BEST are our students in professional degree colleges in fitting into jobs being created at a rapid pace in the Information Technology (IT) and related sectors within the country and abroad? The gap is certainly huge between the demand and quality supply. Irrespective of our boasting of conquering the Silicon Valley and infusing strong fundamentals among our students, a majority are simply not fit to take up jobs available in plenty. The obsolete curriculum was said to be the main reason, apart from lack of communication skills and sound knowledge in English language, blocking the entry of our students in good jobs. We did agree that there was no dearth of talent, but industry needs tailor-made students, who should be ready to perform from day one rather than learning in the job. In a recent HR Conclave held in New Delhi, the industry representatives interacted with University Officials across India and mooted: "Academics have to be in tune with the needs of employers or else professional degree students would lose good opportunities", and stressed the fact that fine-tuning academics to industry demands was a worldwide trend in this era of globalization and liberalization. They recommended the below skills as the need of the hour.
