About Us

Allergies as a cause of illness An allergy is a condition of unusual sensitivity of a person to one or more substances which may be harmless to the majority of other individuals. In the allergic person, the allergic substance (Known as an allergen) is viewed by the brain as a threat to the body's well-being. When contact is made with an allergen, it causes blockages in the energy pathways called meridians, disrupting the normal flow of energy through the body's electrical circuits. This energy blockage causes interference in communication between the brain and body via the nervous system which begins a chain of events that can develop into an allergic response. Undiagnosed allergies are often the cause of common or chronic illnesses which when left untreated can become serious or critical. The brain signals the body {through illness, pain, inflammation, headaches, fever, heart attacks, strokes, abnormal growths, tumors, and various physical physiological and psychological discomforts} about the possible dangers if the energy blockages remain within the body . The result of energy imbalances in the body leads to a diminished state of health in one or more organ system.
