About Us

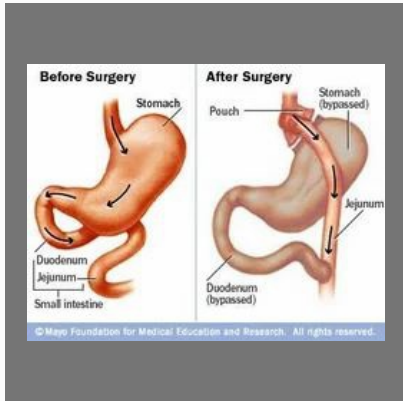

Heart bypass surgery is one of the most invasive surgeries to date because the chest is wide open and the heart is stopped. Common symptoms that indicate needing heart bypass surgery is severe chest pain. Chest pain is an inclination that not enough blood is being received in which the amount of oxygen is limited. To relive this pain, and increase the blood and oxygen flow, is to perform heart bypass surgery. In a heart bypass surgery veins and or arteries are taken from other parts of the body and used to bypass the narrow ones leading into the heart. During this process the chest cavity is open and the heart is stopped. Since the heart is stopped, drugs will be administered to control the amount of bleeding during surgery.
