Meena Mahaveer Patil

It has been noted that traditionally female beings share a soft and delicate relationship with flowers. Any no. of artificial ornaments she puts on to adorn her beauty she doesn't get that natural splendor. But just a small garland around ones hair, called 'Gajara in local dialect, transforms her beauty. Besides a simple flower bestowed upon the feet or head of a statue of God seems to radiate the spiritual energy called 'Chaintnya'. Who doesn't like flower? A flower can be easily thought of as a delicate sense, while its smell can be thought of as a localized perception. The painter has tried to depict flowers in a different sense. Indian history of paintings has been risk enough for its different style as far as 2 dimensional compositions are concerned. Amruta Shergil influenced a no. of Indian painters the way she handled the subject of Indian Women. One does get a feeling of the same in the present work. The ease with which painter has painted them does give a feeling for traditional atone observes them. Even though the shapes Ft their volume have been managed in as easy technique the textural quality of the background creates a different experience. Fewer female figures, their drapery Er the color combination create a pleasure for eyes. One can easily see a visual delicacy in all the works. Women wearing garlands around head, neck besides the freshness of colors seems fascinating. Flower selling women don't seem to have any attachment...
